Excerpt: . . . off the maid in a trice And convey her afar In his magical car To the temple where Hymen is ready to splice For deserving young couples the marital knot. Then away--let er rip!--For a honeymoon trip To the ends of the earth where they cannot be caught. Ah, young Lochinvar, thus equipped nowadays Is a dangerous chap. So for fear of mishap Let intelligent parents get on to his ways And put screens on their balconies, or better yet On their gals put a chain, Lest a swift aeroplane Should come down and make off with their fair Juliet. Ben-bolting the Tariff Oh, do you remember the year Ninety-Three, Sweet Alice, remarked Mr. Bolt, When you were a maid full of innocent glee And I was a frisky young colt. I then had a job paying five plunks a day And we two were booked to be wed, But a low tariff panic came drifting this way And the whole thing was knocked on the head. Oh, yes, I remember those days, Mr. Ben. My father had put up the dough For my mousseline de soie, costing more than a ten, And the rest of my wedding trousseau, When they told us that Wilson, a Democrat gay, Had fixed up a low tariff law So I sent back the ring, put my glad rags away And stayed home with my grief-stricken Pa. Our fate, lovely Alice, was sad to behold. When protection had...
