Excerpt: . around Agnes neck, she kissed her tenderly, and said she was sorry, very sorry for her, which was all the poor child could say. V I do not know what to think of father s let ter, said Agnes, trying to restrain her tears. I cannot understand it. Did it contain bad news? None, whatever. It could contain nothing to grieve me like his severe reprimand. I cannot recall any thing I wrote meriting such a reply. Did he satisfy you regarding Mr. Bellamy s question? asked Carrie, after a long pause, in which she studied how to make the inquiry, if at all. It is upon that very subject his letter pains me. In some way my request for information has made a wrong impression. I but briefly named the subject, and if I recollect rightly, in these words: What was the...
