On the 19th of March, at peace with all men, and with the most triumphant manifestation of the approbation of his Master, he closed the labours of thirty-three years in the vineyard ol the Lord. Of his eminent domestic virtues, a well-ordered family, united in the bonds of the most tender afTection, are to this day living witnesses. While his zeal for the divine law, and his love for the souls of men, impelled him to express his disapprobation of every form of moral evil, and fearlessly to administer the discipline of the church, the exquisite sensibility of his own feelings made him a model of courtesy to all men, and tempered the edge of his reproof with the most affectionate tenderness. The duty of praying with his family was never, after his marriage, omitted by him but once;...
